2016

The aim of the Prize is to single out those architectures of excellence that foster the adaptation of spaces in the quest for the comfort of their inhabitants. Architectures that become transformed into places of quality for people in their daily lives: for working, learning, playing... Architecture to be lived in.

This European-scale prize is open to all projects which were finished and had already been put into use within the 2 year period from 1st of January 2014 to 31st of December 2015.

at Barcelona Pavilion

Among the great number and variety of architecture contests, Living places - Simon Architecture Prize is characterised by an approach defined on the basis of the perspective of the inhabitant, by adopting the video format as the essential means by which to explain the individual work and by a participation process that includes inhabitants and allows them to propose those works they regard as worthy of consideration by the Jury.

Collective places and Personal places constitute the two award categories, a reflection of interest in architecture projected and explained from the perspective of the user an interest that focuses on the experiences that put spaces to the test, not that grade 0 of architecture frozen in the moments prior to its being launched into society and the city.

Living Places - Simon Architecture Prize is an initiative of Simon and it is developed by the Fundació Mies van der Rohe.
